Joe -

As test activities in the West increase in the future the problem of accounting security wise for the classified exposed material you will be receiving will be accentuated and you should consider now how this accounting can best be done. Such system should be the framework for your later and more complex problem of accounting for many multiples of finished products.

Test material will be processed through Mac's system and when mailed to you will be charged to you on his records. Any material returned to Mac should be so indicated on your records, as well as any material sent to us during this test phase. Eventually after study of the test material you will probably destroy it and we will have personnel at your plant to witness destruction and to so certify. Periodically an inventory report should be submitted to indicate material received, material on hand, and material destroyed.

Would you consider this problem and let us know what your plans envision. I am sure Walt or Ted would consider sending one of their men to discuss with you the proposed system, or we can take it up at the next suppliers' meeting.
